

Curious Fox

Some animals, especially youngsters, manage to get into trouble all by themselves. Such is the case of the curious fox. We received a frantic call from a woman in Sun City. A little gray fox was hanging by his neck in the chain link fence in her back yard!! As the woman was giving directions to her house, the fox could be heard screaming in the background. Our volunteers rushed to Sun City and there he was, thrashing and screaming in an attempt to free himself. Our volunteers were able to hold his body so he wasn't choking and the fence was cut with bolt cutters so his head could be pulled out. He was treated for shock at Southwest and will soon be released. That is one lesson that fox will never forget. He's not likely to try and get through a fence ever again.
